Simon Stephens : Ship Models (The Thomson Collection at the Art Gallery of Ontario) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Ship Models (The Thomson Collection at the Art Gallery of Ontario):

As someone who takes an interest in Navy Board and Georgian ship models, I was very interested to read about the models in Thomson Collection and see the beautiful pictures and illustrations that accompanied them. My only quibble, a minor one, is that the book is in paperback (I prefer hardback if I plan to keep the book for a long time).0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five StarsBy DuninessVery nice look into this collection. Paperback but also has a paper book cover.1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Superb photography! Spanning some 350 years, the Thomson Collection of historic ship models contains examples of exquisite workmanship and some of the masterpieces of the genre. Pride of the collection are the rare British dockyard models made to scale for affluent 18th-century clients closely associated with the Navy. A large number of models – made from wood and bone, with rigging of human hair – were made by some of the 120,000 French and other prisoners of the Napoleonic Wars.

Spanning some 350 years, the Thomson Collection of historic ship models contains examples of exquisite workmanship and some of the masterpieces of the genre. Pride of the collection are the rare British dockyard models made to scale for affluent 18th-century clients closely associated with the Navy. A large number of models – made from wood and bone, with rigging of human hair – were made by some of the 120,000 French and other prisoners of the Napoleonic Wars. The diverse collection also includes tugs, dredgers, trawlers, cargo vessels, passenger steamers, private yachts, corvettes, battleships, cruisers, torpedo boat destroyers and two aircraft carriers. The author considers the rich history and the artistry of model shipbuilding. New photography captures the incredible workmanship – the carving, casting, gilding and stitching – that such model-making demands.
