The 160-page offering was written by Stephen Carpenteri, editor of "Pennsylvania Game and Fish" magazine. The book covers everything from the capabilities of various firearms and ballistics to deer behavior and the intricacies of field dressing and butchering. That material is not new, though, given Carpenteri's background -- he spent 12 years living in a Maine cabin without electricity or running water, relying on wild game to survive -- you have to believe he knows what he's talking about. What makes the book unique is its small size. It's designed to fit inside a roomy hunting coat pocket or even a fanny pack.
